For grub control, there are two materials that can be used either as a pour -on or as a spray - co-ral or Ruelene. Neguvon can be applied only as a spray and Famphur can be applied only as a pour-on treatment.

Co-ral is the only one in this group that will also control lice. However, it does give a better lice performance when applied as a spray.

Grub controls should go on no later than November 1.

"This is how you use a drip torch to set a 'back fire,'" explains Gerald Williamson, cooperative student forester of the Virginia Forest Service, to a group of the Robert E. Lee FFA Chapter members. This was part of a special two hour forest fire control training session taught by members of the Forest Service to Vo-Ag students at Appomattox High School.

FFA Members Receive Instruction In Forest Fire Control

Members of the Robert E. Lee FFA Chapter have received training in the prevention and control of forest fires in a special training session taught by the Virginia Forest Service. All members were instructed in the methods of fighting fire along with the importance of keeping our forest free from fire. Upper classmen were given additional training in how to suppress a fire and were given the opportunity of using fire fighting equipment in a special training class in the forest.

Following the training session, members were given the opportunity of applying for membership in a forest fire fighting crew, known as the Keep Virginia Green Crew. To be eligible for membership, a member must be 15 years of age by February 1, 1970, have received training in fire control, received permission of his parents, and be recommended by his instructor of vocational agriculture. The Robert E. Lee FFA Chapter is planning to organize six crews this year. KVG Crews, one used for emergencies in controlling forest fire and are called out only during school hours. Experiences of the past indicate that such calls are valuable in reducing the number of ones burned by forest fires.

Staff members of the Virginia Forest Service who helped with the fire control class this year were Mr. Warren Taylor, Forester, Mr. Gerald Williamson, Cooperative Student with the Forest Service, and Mr. David Smith, Chief Forest Warden for Appomattox County.

However, if his home chapter is on probation (due to failure to meet 95% of its' blood quota in its' fiscal year) he is not eligible for the blood exchange provision and thus would have to pay for the blood he receives!
